EDITORIAL

Dear TV Friends and Readers,

Your regular letters of praise and well wishing are always the high point of my day. I would rather not speculate on how many of you still have not found the courage to communicate with either myself or the many personalities this unique magazine has to offer. I can only say I'm sure it would open new doors of friendship and understanding so please don't hesitate to get involved. Remember, your privacy is always our concern.

Thank you also for your concern and sympathy regarding "Brandy." It pleased me so to know "she" left so many who knew, and cared.

As usual, trying to keep F.M.I. coming out on a bi-monthly basis is quite a chore so any and all help is very much appreciated and needed. Photos and art work can always be submitted for approval and will always be returned if unacceptable, so all of you amateur photographers this is an opportunity to be in print!

As a final note I would like to mention how difficult it is to answer all of your intimate questions on a personal level, so please don't feel slighted if you do not get an immediate reply, "I'm dancing as fast as I can."

All my love
& best wishes,

Kim Christy

Marla

Move over Mrs. Robinson, Marla's in town. Sultry and sexy, who would ever guess, much less, care about her beginnings? She's well on her way here in FEMALE MIMICS INTERNATIONAL.

Marla has never been accused of having a flair for the innocent. Her wardrobe sees to that. If you still haven't got the message, turn the page . . .

The movie "The Graduate" was a turning point in her life. He left the confining life of the big city and became Marla in a small mid-western college town. She leads an active social life and has surprised "more than a few" colleagues. A mistress in the art of seduction, she's a prized member of the psychology department in her new life.

Marla

“Women reach their sexual maturity around thirty. I wasn’t about to miss out . . .” she explains as one of her reasons for her decision to go all the way. A cross-dresser at a young age, the physical aspect was a small step for this woman of the world. Living it up fearlessly in the mid-west.

JAPAN

Emergence of the Butterfly Man

TOKYO—Shinichi Morita applies moist, white powder to his elegant neck with all the ceremony of a groggy truckdriver beginning his morning shave. His brush strokes are broad, hurried, even a little sloppy. The white paste spreads to the neckline of a loose T-shirt.

Kneeling before his laquered dressing table, Morita pauses, giving the mirror a quick, downcast glance. Then he picks up a puff and begins to work the powder into his skin with careful, gentle pats.

And something extraordinary happens.

As he pats the skin, a new color begins to emerge—a soft, warm, delicate shade of pink—the first of a series of steps that transform Shinichi Morita, the man, into Tamasaburo Bando, the onnagata, the finest female impersonator on the Kabuki stages of Japan.

The onnagata, the idealized Japanese woman played only by men since women were banned from the Kabuki stage in 1629, is the heart of Kabuki, a popular form of drama that developed in the late 16th century as a counterpoint to the more aristocratic Noh drama. There was little the onnagata could do to alter the masculine lines of the body or face, or to change the timbre of the voice. Instead, he concentrated on refining expression, developing a sense of proportion and a grace of movement that only the perfect woman could achieve. It is commonly said today that no Japanese woman, no matter how refined, can match the onnagata in grace, sensitivity and beauty.

The lead roles, both male and female, usually have been passed from one generation to another in the closed world of Kabuki, and so it is remarkable that Tamasaburo Bando, born as Shinichi Nirehara in 1950 to a non-Kabuki family, is considered today the epitome of the classic onnagata.

At the age of six, Shinichi began studying dance at the Fujime School in Tokyo, whose mistress was the wife of Kanya Morita IV, one of the leading Kabuki actors of the postwar era. On her recommendation, Shinichi (renamed Kinoji Bando) was enrolled in Kabuki lessons, and in 1957 he debuted as a young boy with a one-line part on the Kabuki stage.

Seven severe and demanding years of apprenticeship followed under the watchful eyes of the Moritas, who adopted Shinichi in 1964. The same year his legal name was changed to Shinichi Morita, he was introduced formally to the Kabuki world as Tamasaburo Bando V, the fifth in a line of actors with that stage name.

Life with his adoptive parents was strictly controlled. There were none of the usual freedoms of youth, and "few friends." Aside from school, only the Kabuki lessons mattered.

"At dinner, whenever my father began a sentence with the words, "today's performance . . ." I would have to immediately sit up straight," Tamasaburo remembers. "And if he began to offer a correction of my performance, I was to immediately stop eating."

Kanya Morita died in 1975. Although Tamasaburo still hears daily critiques from his adoptive mother, who still runs her dance studio and with whom he shares the Morita house in the Sengakuji district of central Tokyo, he no longer has to straighten up and stop eating.

"I'm like the greatest ballerinas of Russia, who, after having studied and gotten that all behind them, have escaped to the West," Tamasaburo says, with the good humor and security that comes from 25 years on the Kabuki stage, and recognition as one of its finest onnagata. "During the lifetime of my father, that was Russia."

Adoption into the house of one of Kabuki's top actors not only gave him an artistic base, but also eased the path into major roles and acceptance among the Kabuki society to some extent. But Tamasaburo Bando also had to overcome a physical handicap of sorts. At 5 feet 10 inches, he is impossibly tall for a classic onnagata. He compensated with what one actor calls "extraordinary beauty": a long, angular face, with melancholy eyes and a small mouth, a long neck, delicate shoulders and long, slender arms. He has the hands of a concert pianist ("everybody says that," he teases), but the fluidity of a mime. When selecting a record from among hundreds that cram his living room bookshelf (Bach, Mozart, Vivaldi, Tony Bennett), the fingers literally fly along the backs of albums like independent extensions of his thin wrists.

There is something of the ballerina in Tamasaburo's extraordinary flexibility. During what close friend and interpreter Alex Kerr calls his "opera exercises" (so called because they are performed just before bedtime to the accompaniment of Verdi), the onnagata stretches and relaxes muscles strained by the day's performance. The routine is "absolutely contortionist," Kerr says. "He does things like touch his head to his toes. He has the most flexible body you've ever seen."

Tamasaburo is also extremely disciplined in a rather different sense. He is often in front of a mirror, checking that the flow of his costume is balanced by his line of sight, looking for just the right height to the hemline, looking for "poses that suit the character of the role I am playing." And, like his colleagues, he is a serious student of the Kabuki tradition—studying photographs and paintings of the classic Kabuki figures of the past, or the courtesans of the Shogunate era, as well as some more contemporary role models—Greta Garbo's pause, for example, and Vivien Leigh's arched eyebrow.

"There is a certain fear that comes with acting all these years," says the 32-year-old performer. "I'm a perfectionist, and I feel that when on stage you should always be able to produce work that will stand up."

When performing, Tamasaburo is awake three hours before his first appearance, taking a typical breakfast of ham and eggs (he smiles as he says that) at 10 a.m. but eating almost nothing else until the performance is finished, usually by 7 p.m. "Sometimes when I'm really hungry, I might have something," he adds, "but I don't want anything to upset my stomach, anything with 'shape.'" A trainer administers a form of sport massage before he does his opera exercises and prepares to sleep, which, during the 25-day run of a Kabuki play, is always before midnight.

A chauffeur, one of four full-time members of his personal staff (a business manager, a ticket handler and a maid are the others), drops him at the theater, where three professional staffers (two male and one female assistant) are ready to help him with his costumes.

Tamasaburo, like virtually all Kabuki actors, applies his own makeup, a laborious process of a dozen steps that includes an oil base, cream highlights for the bridge of the nose, powder for the neck and chest, red and black highlights for the eyes, a face powder and powder for the hands and arms.

The dressing room is in the Japanese traditional style with tatami mats, and the sparse decorations include an old kimono pressed on a screen and a long scroll that hangs from the opposite wall—actually a letter sent by a former Kabuki star to a close Tamasaburo friend, the widow of the late Japanese novelist, Junichiro Tanizaki.

A dual-speaker tape deck with an ample supply of classical tapes looks a bit out of place, though it would fit right in at home, where the living room is crammed with audio and video equipment and furnished in the Scandinavian contemporary style by a friend who is the decorator for the Takashimaya department store. There are two mirrors in the dressing room, and Tamasaburo is constantly checking his costumes and poses, occasionally throwing himself a playful wink.

As he shoos away yet another assistant bringing tea ("I need it stronger to wake me up—I should have stayed in bed") and frets over the audience comprised largely of tour groups ("this won't be a good day—they're all wearing rosettes"), he explains the role of the onnagata. "The aim is to create a pleasure sense of yearning for something, and to provide people with a sort of dream," he says, "to project a deep and profound catharsis, and at the same time, a touch of eroticism, and a bit of grotesqueness."

Although entirely serious about his craft, Tamasaburo feels less than honor-bound to follow the traditions of a Kabuki society caught up in its own share of politics and unspoken rules (one of which he broke by appearing as Desdemona in "Othello," as Lady Macbeth, and as Marguerite in "Camille"). He acknowledges the advantages that come with an annual salary of about $300,000, and, in fact, refuses to appear in commercial endorsements. (To do work to support your craft is fine, but to do other kinds of work for sheer luxury is another kind of thing.)

It isn't likely that Tamasaburo Bando will take the standard Kabuki path to old age and retirement, with an heir-apparent close behind. "I have no particular intention to pass this on," he says, just as he feels "no sense of great mission" as the most popular figure in this traditional Japanese art form. "If I wanted to retire," he says matter-of-factly, "I feel as though I could walk away from it any time."

One suspects that might be rather difficult, however, because when asked just how much of the role he takes with him into private life, the foremost onnagata of Kabuki answers, "The only things I leave in the theater are my costumes and my wigs."

Letters to the Editor

IF YOU WISH TO WRITE TO KIM AND POSSIBLY HAVE YOUR CORRESPONDENCE PUBLISHED, PLEASE ADDRESS IT TO KIM CHRISTY, C/O FEMALE MIMICS INTERNATIONAL, P.O. BOX 1622, STUDIO CITY, CA 91604.

Dear Kim:

I just picked up the latest issue of FMI. I buy it whenever I see it, but that's not very often.

I really enjoy the articles and the pictorials. I personally have been crossdressing for several years off and on, and am really intrigued by the idea of passing as a girl in public.

I was wondering if you could answer a few questions for me: Is there anyplace I can find out about all the publications put out for TV's? I once saw a copy of TV Times, for example. And: How or where can I find out about various places like the Queen Mary and The Plaza in other cities? And where can I find out about any stores there might be, like the Stage Door and Cover Girl, which I have heard about but don't find locally?

One more thing: I just love Heather Fontaine. Is there anywhere I could write to her? I will really appreciate any help you can give me.

Sincerely,
Dave

Dear Dave:

I realize the difficulty in finding the reading material you prefer. May I suggest you add your name and address to our "Special" list of inquiries, and from time to time we will be offering some of this type of information.

Heather can be written c/o FMI if you like. (We are not authorized to forward any of our "girls'" addresses—Sorry!)

Sincerely,
Kim Christy

Dear Kim:

I just picked up my second copy of FMI. Here in Wisconsin its hard to find (I found Vol. 12, No. 9). I really enjoy your magazine and look forward to reading it. How do I go about subscribing to FMI?

I've been crossdressing for 12 years now. I have found a lady who has helped me out in some areas. She likes for me to dress as I do. I've brought her clothes, etc., and she likes the idea. She gives good head and we do the 69 very well together. My girlfriend is a career woman, a professional in her field.

Unfortunately, I was ripped off from a mail order catalog for women's clothing a while back, and now I buy everything in person. (In case you're wondering who ripped me off, it was MS Enterprises of New York. They cashed my check for $36.64, and I never got my merchandise-or my money returned.)

I really enjoy FMI's letters to the editor. They put me at ease, knowing that I'm not alone. Your Personal Ads can help me find what I'm looking for, and offer me to someone else. Keep up the good work on FMI and I'll always be a faithful reader. You have my permission to print this letter in whatever column you like.

A true & devoted reader,
Terri

Dear Terri:

It's really a shame that certain mail order houses resort to ripping off innocent folks like yourself. I'm sure they'll get their day.

Also, thanks for the words of encouragement and praise. Good Luck in finding that special someone!

Sincerely,
Kim Christy

Drag Life

IN THE BAD OLD DAYS

Tony Midnight has been a fixture on the drag scene since 1951 when he came here as a performer. For some time he was the only female impersonator appearing in this area.

Tony opened his studio as a costume designer in 1953 and since that time he has dressed more impersonators than any other designer. He designed the lavish costumes for the two most prestigious impersonator shows—12 years with the Jewel Box Review and 4 years with New York's 82 Club. For the latter he went to New York in 1958 and returned to Chicago in 1963.

In New York he was associated with the office of New York's top producer, David Merrick, for whom he designed costumes for several road companies of "Gypsy,"

"Carnival," and "Subways Are For Sleeping." Tony also worked on such TV shows as the Perry Como Show.

Since returning to Chicago he has been kept busy doing work for various shows and name entertainers. His fantastic Las Vegas type gowns and costumes have won a record 20 first prizes at the Halloween balls around the country.

One of Tony's creations, undoubtedly his most lavish, won First Prize at Masquerade '77. It was a fantastic peacock in sequins with a huge tail-piece that lifted and spread showing some 3,000 real peacock eyes.

Tony's studio has been located for 15 years on the first floor of a 100-plus year old hotel near what was once the beginning of the Rush Street nightclub area.

Now larger, but still resplendent in middle age, Tony still has a full head of grey-blond hair. In his youth he was regarded as one of the most glamorous and beautifully gowned of all the female impersonators. Now he turns out gowns for others. Our question and answer session went as follows.

Q You have been a performer and a designer: what sort of background did you have for this?

A My childhood was unbelievably drab. I was born the youngest of six children in rural Texas. It was during the worst years of the depression. Everyone was just as poor as we were, if that was any consolation.

I was very artistic and impressionable with a deep thirst for beauty. I can remember catching birds and butterflies just so I could study their beautiful colors and markings. Then I would release them. I could never kill anything.

Q How did you get your start as a female impersonator?

A I always wanted to be a designer, but had no money to pay for training. Becoming an impersonator was my roundabout way of achieving that goal.

I had left home at 15 and ended up at the Navy yard at Hunters Point near San Francisco. This was during the war. I had to lie about my age to get a job and I used my false ID to get in to see the show at Finocchio's. I was absolutely fascinated by the female impersonators and went back again and again. The cast included Miles Marsh, Freddie Renault, Walter Hart, Lee Kar, Micky Galluchi, and the greatest beauty of all time, Harvey Lee. The real star of the show was Jackie Maye, a stately beauty and a marvelous performer. I was to work with many of those performers later on. Jackie Maye and I became great friends.

I looked at them and decided that I could do just as well or better, and it would give me a chance to design the fabulous gowns I had in mind.

After the war was over I went back to Texas and bluffed my way into a show at the Granada Club in Galveston. I only knew three songs, but I had made myself ten lovely gowns. They loved my wardrobe and fortunately forgave my singing.

Galveston was wide open at the time with about ten whorehouses lined up on Post Office Street. The head madam owned several of the cathouses as well as the Granada Club where I worked. She loved my gowns and asked me to make some negligees and trick outfits for her girls. I did, and they loved them. That was my first experience as a designer for someone other than myself.

To this day I think every gown should have a lot of class with just a dash of the whore in it!

Q What happened after Galveston?

A During an election year the police chief was dumped and the Texas Rangers moved in and closed all the houses, including the Granada Club. I went back to the west coast where I worked at the Greenwich Village on Hollywood Blvd. There were many clubs all over California—also Portland and Seattle. It was like a circuit. You played twelve weeks in each spot then moved to another. After a few years I was asked to join the fabulous Jewel Box Review at the Balconades Club in Pittsburgh as the Mistress or Master of Ceremonies. I had already begun to MC on the west coast. I was in great demand for this job because of my large flashy wardrobe. I changed completely between each act.

Q We have heard stories about this prestigious show. Could you tell us about it?

A The show was owned and produced by Doc Benner and Danny Brown. They were long-time lovers and wonderfully talented people. The Jewel Box was a huge nightclub in Miami Fla. where the show played during the season there. During the off season, we toured. At that time they had two units. The main show stayed in Pittsburgh and the second unit toured.

There were about thirty-five performers, all the very tops in the business at that time. The show included T.C. Jones, Lynn Carter, and Jackie Maye as the star. The only woman was Mickey Mercer who dressed as a guy and had a wonderful voice.

Strangely enough, both T.C. and Jackie are dead now. Lynn Carter has had several heart attacks and is very ill. Mickey Mercer went to Paris years ago and has never returned.

Rickey Renee was also in the show doing Josephine Baker. He went to Europe and is still a big star there and in England.

The wardrobe was created by one of the top designers in the business, Stanley Rogers, who had done the wardrobe for the various Shubert Theaters in New York. It was fabulous! Danny Brown had gone to Paris to get the feathers and rhinestone jewelry. Nothing was spared to make this the top show of its kind in the world. It was a pleasure to be a part of it.

I was to either quit or be fired four different times during the next few years. I got along fine with Danny but not with Doc. During one hiatus I was booked from Pittsburgh to come to the Miami Lounge in Chicago. That was the real turning point of my life, and strangely enough, I had to be talked into it.

Q What sort of drag life was in existence in Chicago at that time?

A I loved Chicago at once and I must say I went over wonderfully. I couldn't help but be a big hit; you see, I was the only female impersonator in the whole area. To explain the reason for this, I will have to go back into the history of drag clubs in Chicago.

The first one that we have record of was the K-9 Club which was located on Walton where "Don the Beachcomber" is now. This was in the late 20's and early 30's during the heyday of Al Capone and prohibition.

In the cast of impersonators that worked there were Li-Kar, Billy Herrera, Johnny Mangum, Del Leroy, Billy Russell, Billy Brennan, Billy Richards and Danny Daniels who worked in men's clothes.

The other club was the Picadilly and was located on North State St. In the cast, which appeared there over a period of years, were Francis David, Cleo Stafford, Texas Plant, Francis Stillman, Wesley Davis, Chickie Roche, Gypsey Lee, and "Giggles," the comedian.

Mind you, these were illegal speakeasies run by the mob and allowed to run only because the payoff was [made] to the right people. They packed the people in for several years before they were finally closed during an election year by the prohibition officers.

In the raid at the K-9 Club, the performers escaped down a fire escape that is still there. But not before Billy Richards hit a prohibition officer over the head with a bottle. I think we should put a plaque on that building, don't you?

Li-Kar is retired in San Francisco; Del Leroy is retired in Houston and I hear from him often. Johnny Mangum is managing an apartment building in Los Angeles. All the rest are now dead.

After prohibition, Chicago was controlled by the police department that was hostile to all drag people. During the mid-forties a show appeared for a few months at the Playhouse Club on Clark St. near Ohio. It was closed by the police. In the cast were Lee Leonard, Kenny Roberts, and Nadi-John.

The drag bars of that era were the Wind-Up on State St. where Potash Grocery is now, the 12 O'Clock Club, [now a] vacant lot adjacent to the Trip on Ohio St.; and the Storm on State St. Guests at this [last] club were greeted by special effects of thunder and lightning.

All these bars were closed in one big sweep by a police captain who made the infamous statement, "No queer hangouts will be allowed in Chicago. We intend to run them out of this fair city once and for all." Can you imagine such a statement being made now? It could happen again if we aren't vigilant.

Every leaf was overturned under which a queen might be hiding. The newspapers reported all this gleefully, including the names of the people involved. A lot of drag people lost their jobs and were forced to leave the area. The rest went into hiding. (Yes, our old friend the closet.)

The aftermath of all this was what I found when I came here to perform at the Miami Lounge at 55th and California. The notorious captain was gone by this time and a few drag bars had cautiously opened. The Miami Lounge was owned by Neal Cooper from New Orleans. He had seen the show at the Wonder Club there and wanted to bring impersonators to Chicago. He decided to start with just one and add others later if it worked.

Ricki Paige opened the Club and worked for about 4 months. Geta Gilmore worked there for only a short time. I had worked with Geta in the Jewel Box and he knew that I had a large repertoire of material and had worked alone before. He had Neal bring me in from Pittsburgh.

Chicago drag people were starved for entertainment and packed the club. I did five shows each night, six nights a week, and was on stage for 40 minutes each show.

This was murder on my throat. I was there for 8 months and began to suffer from laryngitis.

I had been approached by Sid and Millie Schwartz who were owners of a bar on Argyle St., the Argyle Show Lounge. They made me a good offer, but I would only accept it if I could bring in at least one other impersonator to help carry the load. They agreed, and I brought in Gene Michaels, "Michelle," from Florida. I had worked with him at the Circus Bar in Miami Beach. He was a wonderful entertainer. We did campy numbers together as well as our own individual shows.

When we opened at the Argyle we had a piano player who just couldn't cut it. We had to replace him fast. An agency sent over a quiet young man who wore horn-rimmed glasses. He explained that he worked in TV here as a director but wanted to earn money moonlighting as a piano player.

TV was performed live in those days and was still a fledgling business; I guess the pay wasn't too good.

The young man was an excellent accompanist. His name was William Friedkin. Yes, the same Billy Friedkin who directed such blockbuster movies as "The French Connection," "The Exorcist," and "The Sorcerer," among others.

We packed them in at the Argyle for about a year before election time came around. The State Attorney's office closed us this time. They came in while I was on stage performing with Billy Friedkin at the piano and ordered me off. I complied "gracefully." We didn't go to jail but we were told in no uncertain terms to "cease and desist." We did.

By this time the throat specialist had told me that I must have an operation on my throat to remove nodes which were the result of so much abuse. This meant at least six months off.

I went into Michael Reese Hospital and had the operation. When I came out I was broke and very depressed. I had no male clothes except the barest necessities. Therefore I had to get a job where I would wear a uniform. I went to work as bell-hop at the Allerton Hotel on Michigan Ave.

I also enrolled in a designing school but found out that they couldn't teach me a thing that I hadn't already learned from Stanley Rogers. He was getting old and had taken me on as his assistant on the last Jewel Box show he had done. He was a hard task-master but a brilliant costumer. Stanley liked me and told me that I should stop performing and go into costuming full time.

I decided that this was my chance to do just that. I saved my money and bought my sequin machine. It was made to order in Paris and cost $1800. I first started sewing and creating gowns in my apartment. I quit my job at the Allerton and moved my machine into a shop in the basement of the Lorraine Hotel at Wabash and Van Buren. It was a show business hotel which fit in with my purposes. I soon had to hire three people to help me. This was in 1953.

The bars in operation at the time were Omars on Clark, the Hollywood Bowl, also on Clark, the Shoreline "7" on Division, the Terrace in Hyde Park, Big Lou's on Halsted, and the bar to top all camp bars, Louie Gages, which at the time was way out on Mannheim Road. This was out in the country then.

It is hard to give a good description of this place. It had obviously been a small bar at one time but had been added to in all directions. The building was practically falling down and had sawdust on the floor. There was a black woman at an old upright piano which had no front on it. She used no mike at all but somehow yelled above the noise. The place drew a packed crowd from all over the midwest and was in operation for years. When it was finally closed during the usual election year, it was brutal in the extreme! All names of the people caught in the raid appeared in the Tribune. This included lawyers, politicians, government workers, doctors and countless teachers and college professors. All lost their jobs.

I had met Louie Gage and his lover in Miami Beach at the Circus Bar. They were nice gentle people and didn't deserve this. Louie had confided to me that his pay-off was astronomical. As usual, it did no good in the end.

Linda Lee's Pages

Just when you thought it was safe to go back to FEMALE MIMICS again, here's lucky #13 with Linda (Jaws) Lee ready to snap the head off anyone who treats transgendered people as less significant or worthwhile than others.

Actually I'm sorry to have missed being in #12, but this has been an especially busy summer for me and I've hardly had time to write a postcard (as some of my correspondents will know . . .) let alone an article for FEMALE MIMICS.

I've finished another season of a touring puppet program I work with and am currently doing a production of FIDDLER ON THE ROOF, having been called in about halfway through rehearsals to replace someone who dropped out.

This, plus further speaking and other commitments, has kept me going at a run until a few days ago. Now that FIDDLER is nearly through (it has done very well, thank you . . .) I can take a deep breath, settle back and doze off . . . ah . . . that is, write another column.

(Some people, I admit, have accused me of writing in my sleep to which I can only reply "It's quieter than snoring.")

Naturally with all the activity centered around work I haven't been terribly active on anything else. So, most of the news I have this time has reached my desk thanks to the thoughtfulness of friends and those of you readers who have taken the time to send items to me.

I do really value this information, not only because it is often interesting in itself, but because it can provide the spark that suggests an idea for a whole column.

Frankly it is very hard to write about a single topic, even as varied and complex a topic as gender, issue after issue unless I have feedback from other sources, other minds.

Otherwise it's too easy to begin repeating myself and about the time that starts happening, I'll pack up my pencil. I've never had much admiration for authors who write the same book (or story, or column) over and over, and I don't intend to become one.

I freely admit that there are certain topics that crop up in these pages fairly often because I feel so strongly about them. Even so I try to give them a rest if I don't have something new to say or some sort of different angle to consider.

This leads (rather cleverly, I think . . .) into a topic I touched on last time F.M.I. #11) and threatened to write more about: the thought that those of us who get along well in our chosen gender, who pass readily, and who are knowledgeable and comfortable with the subject of transgenderism have almost an obligation to be somewhat "public" about the subject.

I realize it seems strong to speak of it as an obligation and many transgendered people won't see it that way. I can understand and sympathize with their point of view, but I feel that unless people make themselves and their knowledge available then the attitude of the general public can never be expected to change.

A person's attitude is shaped by the material available about a subject. Most of the general public would consider transgenderism to include anything which deals with cross-dressing and since the great bulk of readily available material that touches on this is distorted and negative we can hardly expect the attitude of the public to be anything but distorted and negative.

It never is easy to open up about one's deepest and most personal feelings.

Furthermore, if we, personally, do nothing to correct that situation then we accept that judgement.

It is as Eldridge Cleaver said, "If you aren't part of the solution, you're part of the problem."

By all of this I don't mean to suggest that everyone has to give talks to groups.

When I was a child I learned a song called "Brighten The Corner." Its main idea was that each of us should do what we can where we are to make things better, and frankly it's not a bad thought.

There are other ways of being "public." One is to take a stand when you see or hear something that is inaccurate and damaging to transgendered people or, for that matter, something that is accurate and non-judgemental.

If we're willing to "call" people on their inaccuracies or encourage them for accurate material it will help, especially if it concerns the mass media.

Publishers, producers, networks, etc. are all open to pressure from public opinion; they have to be for many reasons. And they are especially likely to respond if the opinions are intelligently expressed and clearly backed up by knowledge of the subject.

Another way of being "public" is to be open with friends and acquaintances. There's no need to press the subject on them, but if people you know ask questions, be willing to answer.

In fact this is probably the most effective method of any because the people who know us as people will often be the most ready to understand and accept us.

This isn't universally the case, of course, no one can make that broad a generalization. Some people are too close to us to readily accept so major (as they see it) a change. But by and large, it is people we interact with who can see beyond the externals whether they know us before, after, or all the way through a transition.

Some people are forced by circumstances to be "public" with a wider group of people than this, however.

Two columns back (F.M.I. #10) I mentioned Tula, the top British model who appeared in FOR YOUR EYES ONLY, the most recent James Bond film, and who was later the subject of a pictorial article in OUI magazine.

The British press broke the story that Tula was a transsexual shortly before the OUI article and she denied it.

Since then she has changed her mind and admitted that it is, after all, true. At least partly as a result of her harassment by journalists, she wrote her own story which was just published in England by Sphere books.

A friend from London sent me a copy of an article from a British magazine in which a woman journalist, Elizabeth Jane Howard, interviewed Tula. From a skeptical start Ms. Howard seems to have come away from their meetings with a considerable warm admiration for Tula.

And one of the things that was clear from the article was the relief that Tula felt at finally being able to be honest with the world at large after having to try and hide her real background for so long.

Still, it obviously was not an easy thing for her to do. It never is easy to open up about one's deepest and most personal feelings.

That's one reason I so much admire Wendy Carlos. Clearly for someone of her temperament, someone who is shy almost to the point of being reclusive, it was a huge step to grant the interviews that led to the PLAYBOY article. Indeed, I have heard rumors since then that she now somewhat regrets doing it.

But she did do it and it was a brave, necessary

Queen Of The UNIVERSE 1983

From the most exotic corners of the globe, the best female impersonators were present for Empress LA REY'S 13th annual presentation of, QUEEN OF THE UNIVERSE, 1983.

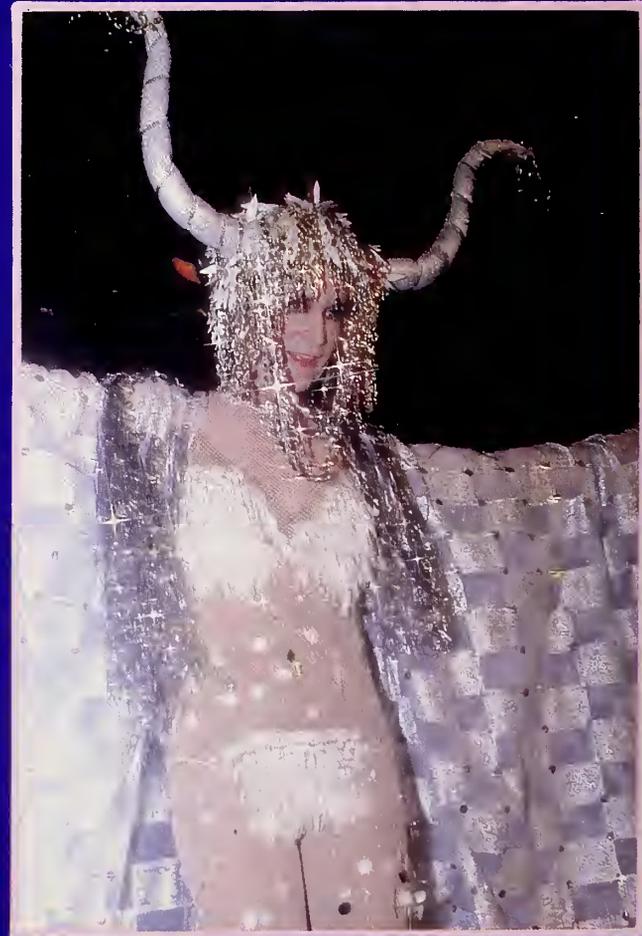

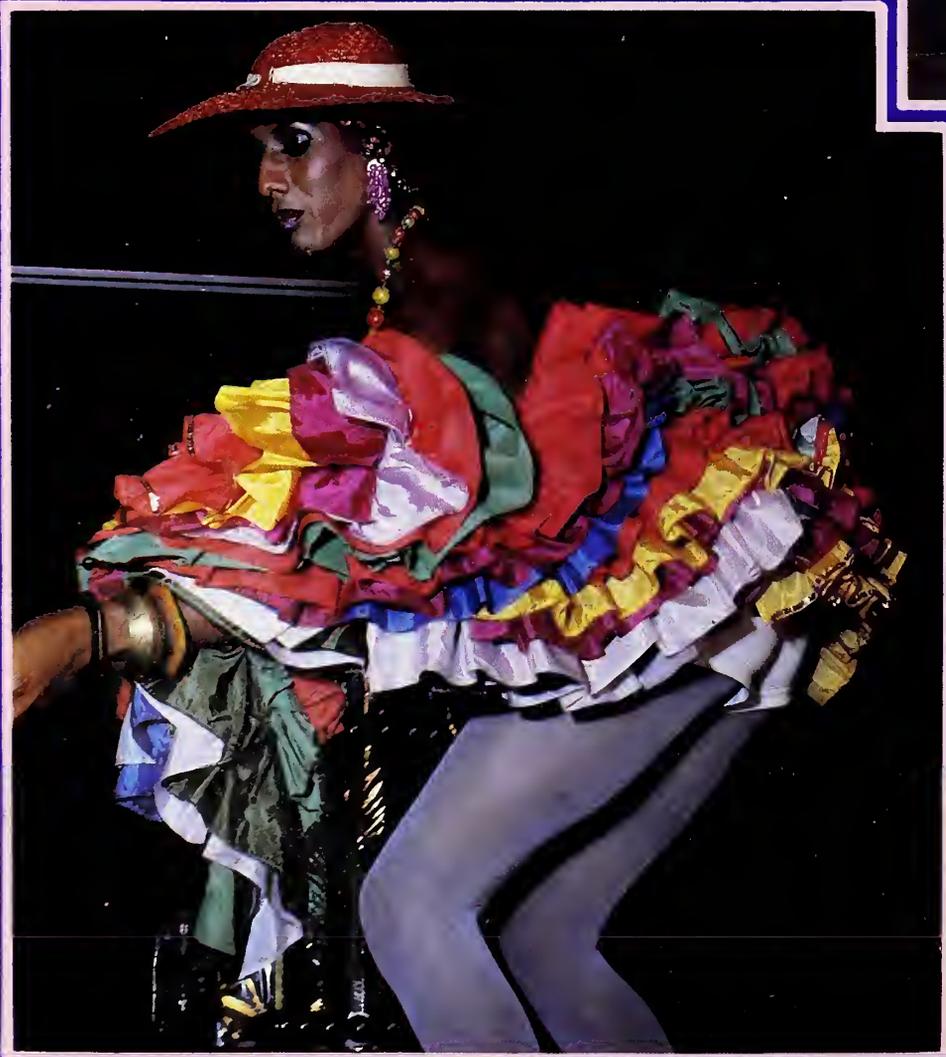

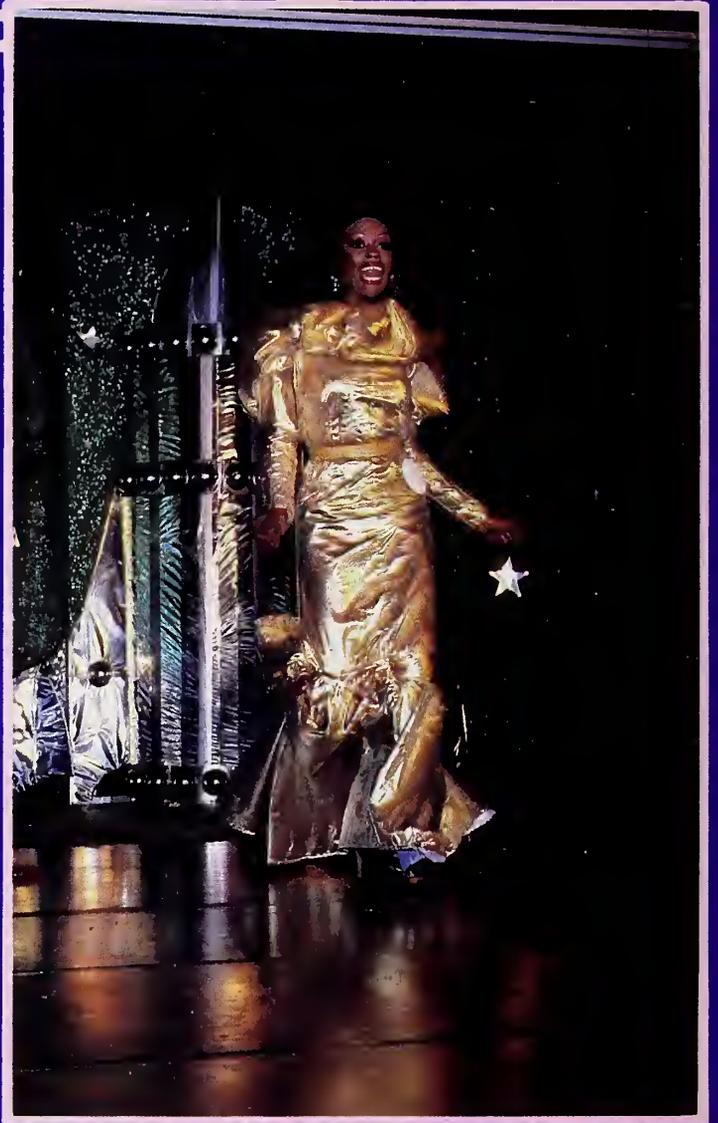

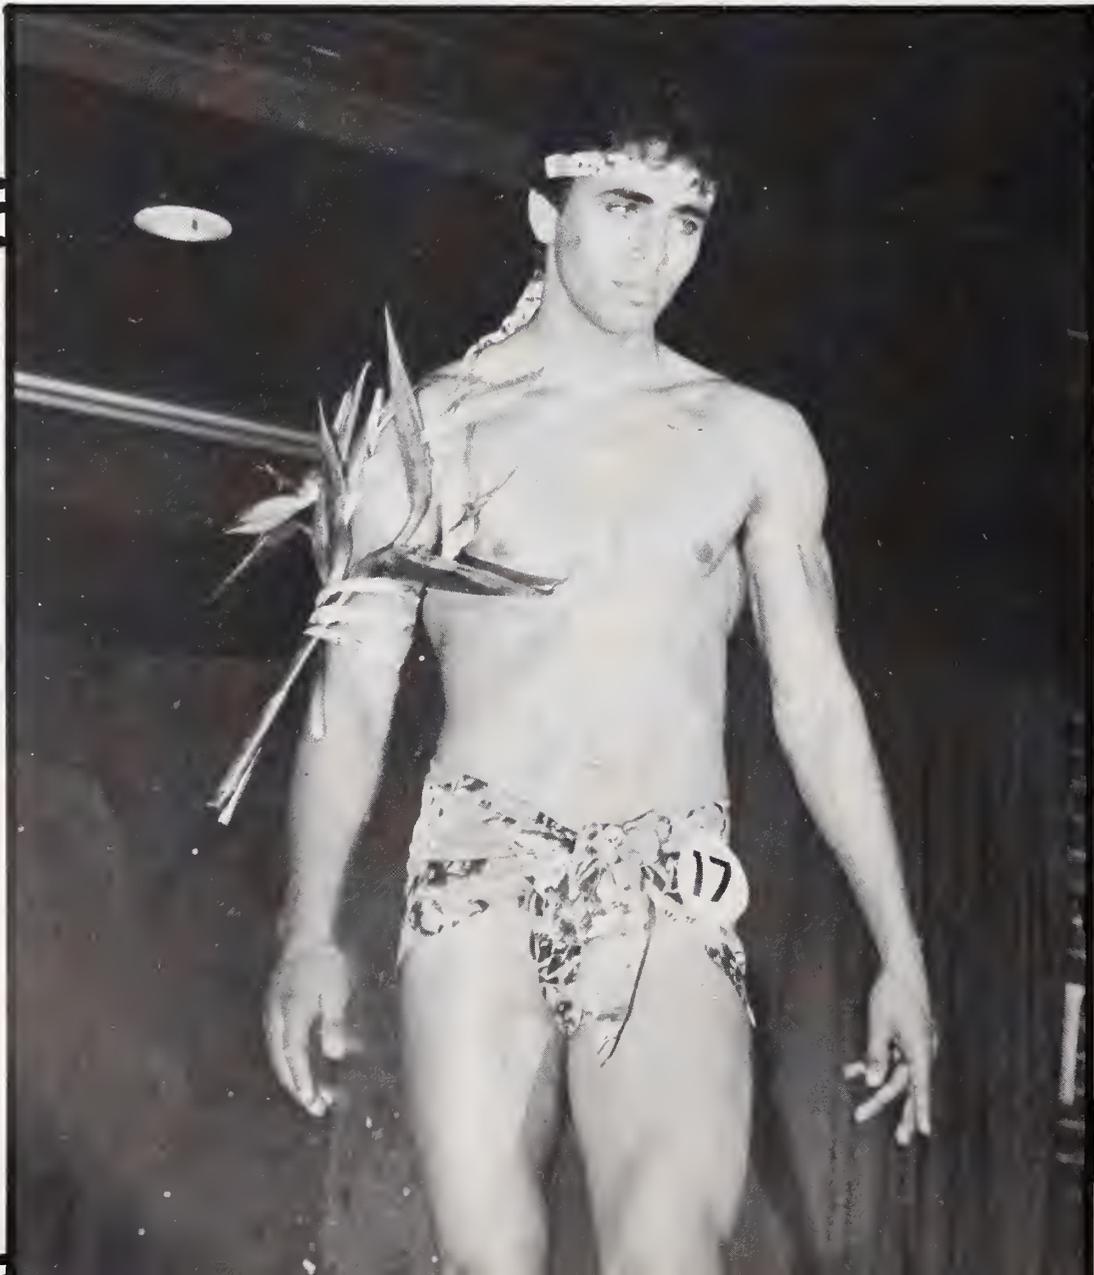

A spaceship from an alien planet landed on stage. Energetic dancers alighted to the oohs and ahhs of the audience at the jampacked Mayflower Ballroom. It was an opening that was literally, out of this world. Representing all the points of the globe, the international flavor of the pageant was overshadowed by the elaborate costumes. Accented by the muscular hunks vying for the title KING OF THE UNIVERSE 1983, it was a pity that there would be only one winner.

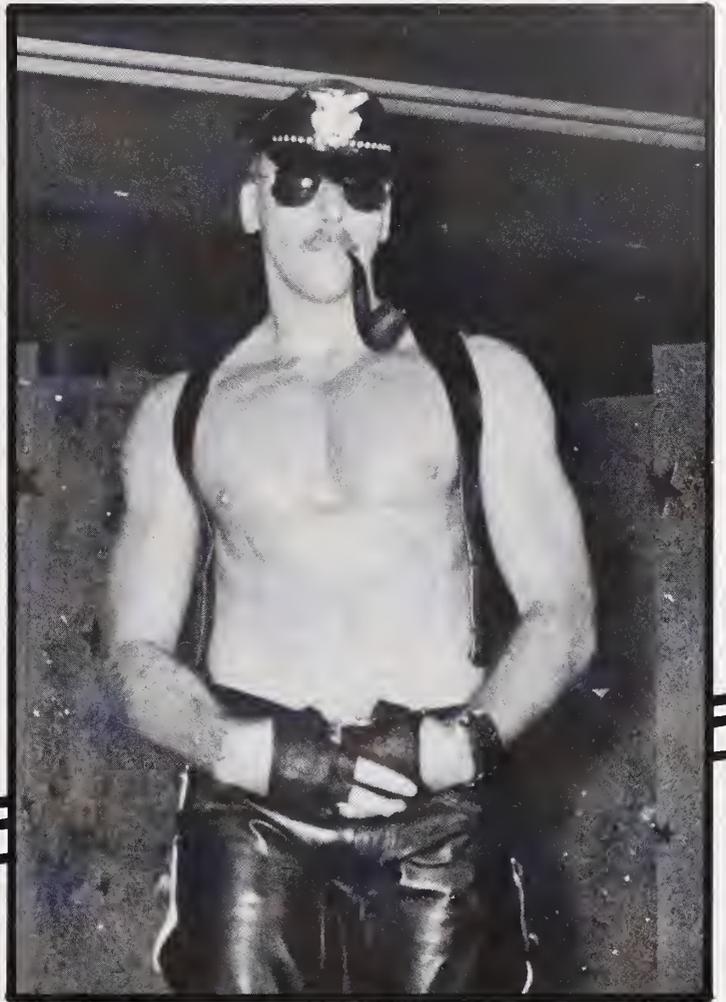

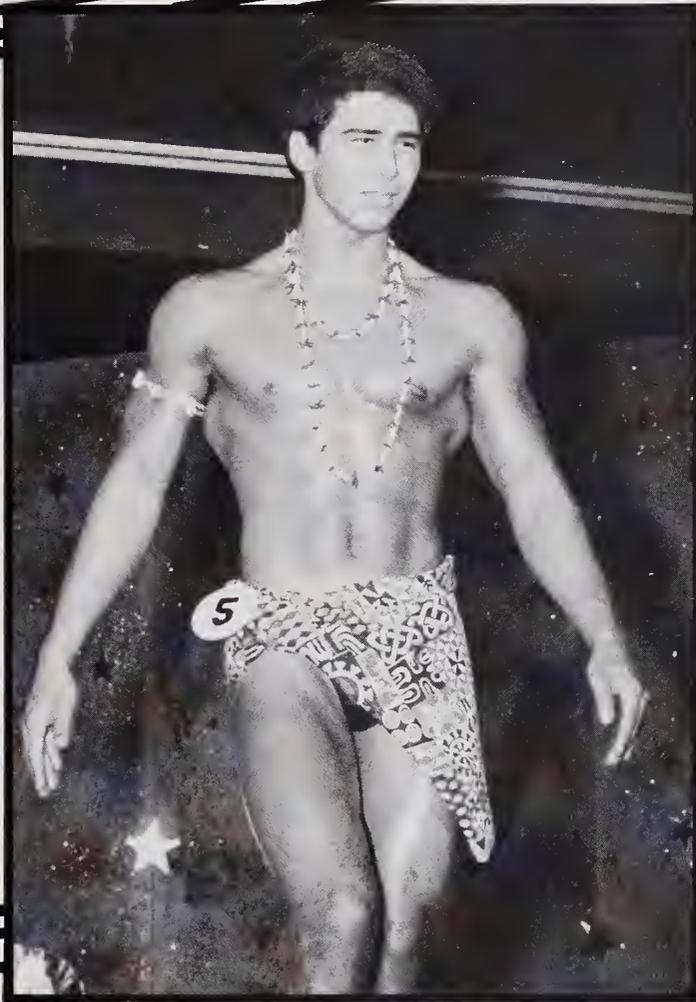

It takes a "special kind of woman" to create and to model these stunning masterpieces. From funky to elegant, breezy to sophisticated, the only thing missing from this Parisian fashion show was Paris itself. Effortlessly gliding along, the poses were ever so dramatic.

Just as diverse, some of the contestants for KING OF THE UNIVERSE 1983.

After the presentation of the contestants, "females" in evening gowns and men in swimsuits, the group was culled to 10 in each category.

The QUEEN OF THE UNIVERSE, 1983, is Christine Sue-Miss Hong Kong. Sponsored by Kitty II, she was radiant as she walked down the runway to the appreciative cheers of the crowd. KING OF THE UNIVERSE, 1983 is Gary Sickler-Mr. Italy. He was sponsored by RIPPLES.

thing to do. When I think of the people who have undoubtedly been helped by that article; for whom, perhaps, this was the first in-depth information they had on the subject, I can only wish that similar information would continue to appear in the media.

Being a transgendered person is a very lonely thing, especially through the early years of one's life. As I grew up I knew I was different from other children, even though I couldn't have articulated how I was different.

Then, a little later (basically as soon as my sister was old enough that I could wear her things) I began to cross-dress. But it was a total and shameful secret and as far as I knew I was the only person in the world who did it.

I'm sorry to report that I've run across yet another example of the "homicidal maniac in drag" gimmick.

It was years after this, while I was in Junior High School that I found my first reference to the subject, a book called TRANSVESTITES: MEN IN FEMALE DRESS by David O. Caldwell, Ph.D., published by Sexology magazine.

It was, actually, quite a good book but much more important it was proof that I was not alone, that there were other people in the world like myself.

It was a few more years before I found any substantial information about a transsexual. It was not very good information for it was popularized and sensationalized and didn't go into depth at all, but it was infinitely better than what I'd had before which was nothing.

I think wistfully now and then of how lucky I would have been if that information had been as good as the Wendy Carlos interview. All the same it was something and it allowed me to feel less alone.

It's a hard thing to feel completely alone.

* * * * *

Lest readers think I'm exaggerating the problem of how transgendered people are dealt with in the mass media much of the time, I'm sorry to report that I've run across yet another example of the "homicidal maniac in drag" gimmick.

I had hoped this plot twist might die a merciful death after DRESSED TO KILL. It hasn't.

This example, which I encountered purely by chance, was TERROR TRAIN, a little gem from Canada (remind me to have it cut and polished . . .). At least I have the consolation that I didn't inadvertently buy an admission ticket and thus encourage the people who made it. (No, I didn't sneak into the theatre; I saw it on cable TV.) The consolation is small, though, because this was pretty awful publicity.

Not only is it bad publicity in its effect on the general public, but think of the feelings this could generate in someone, especially a young person who cross-dresses. As if the situation itself didn't generate enough guilt, there's the suggestion in TERROR TRAIN (and unfortunately in many other films, television scripts, and so on) that people who cross-dress wind up slicing their friends into Shredded Wheat.

That's one of the important things about being open about oneself, about being "public." Besides helping the general public to learn the truth about transgendered people, we can help each other.

The last time I spoke at the local college where I've given most of my talks, a young woman came up to me afterward, took my hands in hers and told me that my talk was the high point of the entire semester in the class for her. She said the same thing to her instructor later on, I heard, and it made me feel good because, clearly, here is someone who is going to carry away a positive attitude about transgendered people and that's the whole idea.

I don't really make any money from these talks. They're usually a sort of "pass-the-hat" arrangement which generally nets about enough to pay for my gas and sometimes enough to cover the time I have to take off from work to do them. But I'm trying to find ways to do more, and if I could figure out how to do nothing but this kind of speaking (without starving . . .) I would do it.

That's how important I think it is.

* * * * *

On to more cheery subjects . . . or at any rate other topics.

A friend asked me the other day what correspondence contact sources were still going and I had to confess I didn't know.

Naturally I mentioned the FEMALE MIMICS INTERNATIONAL classified ads and I said I thought that FEMALE IMPERSONATORS NEWS was still going but beyond that I hadn't heard anything in a long while about some that used to be very active.

I know, for instance, that GEMINI is not currently published. I just talked to Sally Douglas who used to publish it and she said she'd like to start again but just doesn't see herself having the time free in the near future. In fact she wondered if I'd like to take it over (watch this space . . .).

Probably the most comprehensive resource of this sort was the TRANSVESTITE WORLD DIRECTORY published by Empathy Press in Seattle.

When I made my cross-country trip a few years back I tried calling the number that had been given in an issue of the TV WORLD DIRECTORY. The number was disconnected.

Over the last year or 18 months I've written Cathy Slavik, the publisher, a couple of times and haven't had any response. I'd be interested to know if she is still keeping Empathy going, if she's temporarily inactive, or if she's given up altogether.

From a personal point of view I hope she's still going. Empathy put out a very high quality directory and it was through Empathy that I (and many others I'm sure) first started corresponding with other transgendered people. That was a pretty important step in my life, second only, perhaps, to discovering that there were other such people.

I made some very fine acquaintances through Empathy and a number of these people have become long-standing close friends. I'd hate to see this resource lost.

Clearly the Fuki Club members approach their cross-dressing with respect both for themselves and for the image they hope to project.

If any of you readers have current news about Empathy, I'd appreciate knowing what their status is these days.

* * * * *

I had a nice letter the other day from Mr. Tetsuji Saito who founded the Fuki Club for cross-dressers in Tokyo, Japan.

It began in 1957 which makes 1982 its Twenty-fifth Anniversary year, for which Mr. Saito deserves to be deeply honored. From an initial start when it was hard even to find a way to reach people who might be interested, it now has over 60 members. This might not seem like a lot, but it has enabled the club to have a permanent meeting place with facilities for changing and make-up and so on.

I occasionally think it would be a wonderful thing if people could create something like the Fuki Club in U.S. cities with a large transgendered population like New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

Unfortunately I realize, when reality takes over from this rosy dream, that it probably wouldn't be possible.

Expenses would be a major problem in these days of astronomical housing costs and similar interest rates and even if that factor were overcome, it would be hard to keep the club from falling apart from the same problems that plagued Salmacis in its last days which I wrote about in my previous column (F.M.I. #11).

The only way around this (apart from an incredibly wealthy benefactor) would be to make the club very exclusive which grates against the democratic sensibilities most of us were raised with.

In any case I have nothing but admiration for Mr. Saito and the Fuki Club. He has accomplished something very difficult and very remarkable.

He also sent along some pictures of the members and is be congratulated again. All are attractive and some are quite remarkable beauties.

But what is more, each seems to have taken great care with her transition. There are no sloppy or crude make-up jobs, no ill-fitting clothes, no carelessly chosen or artificial-looking wigs.

Clearly the Fuki Club members approach their cross-dressing with respect both for themselves and for the image they hope to project. We can all learn a lesson from them.

That about finishes things up for this time.

Do remember that I would appreciate any news items of interest to transgendered people. They are a big help in keeping this column rolling. Letters can reach me c/o OZMA PRODUCTIONS.

Many thanks to those who did pass along items of interest. It's your help that makes it all possible.

Before I forget (as if I would . . .) the cassette "A Conversation With Linda Lee" is still available for $9.95 plus $1.00 postage and handling (California residents add sales tax please . . .) from

OZMA PRODUCTIONS

P.O BOX 23001

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA 94623

That includes my own selection of my favorite pictures, "The Linda Lee Album," as well.

And that really does finish things up for this time. I'll hope to talk with you again soon.
